Green Barcelona

Walking around the most natural city

Barcelona is a cosmopolitan city known especially for its culture, art and architecture. However, few know the most natural and surprising side of the city that we find nearby and that you can discover easily at the hand of a nature guide.

Strolling along paths and trails through Montjuïc or Collserola, you will be surprised how much nature can show you about its history: the origins of its construction with ancient sediments of Montjuïc, age-old trees tell us how people in Barcelona survived hard times, or who the city's new flying inhabitants are and what impact they have on nature. And, while taking the most original picture of the city, you can learn why we are a Mediterranean land par excellence and about the origins of our precious Mediterranean diet.

Scents, flavors, touches and sounds that explain how we Mediterraneans are and how we have transformed our Barcelona nature into the culture that millions of visitors enjoy every day. A walk without great difficulties in the unknown surroundings of the Collserola hills from where you can contemplate the most natural and genuine city or the greenest and most gentle face of the Montjuïc mountain.

An itinerary for those who love nature even close to the city and those who experience a land through its culture.
